With KeyMacro you can record the keys typed on your keyboard and play them back later. Many of you may have tried a screencast software like Camtasia, CamStudio, ScreenFlow or Jing or even ran a screen recorder such as Windows Movie Maker in the past. But I can tell you right away, screencasters make terrible teachers. It's a good tool for screencasting your desktop activity, but they have a bad habit of making the screencaster crash or having the video capture glitches. They might have the best camera in the world and can make the process of capturing screenshots a breeze, but how do they capture the content of what is in your screen and the mouse movement? They fail. KeyMacro has over 100 keyboard macros that can easily be created. Unlike others, we are the only software developer that allows you to add buttons to your keyboard. Why Should You Try It? * Have you ever wanted to take a picture of your keyboard? A live screencast of your keys? A video of how you type certain letters? A video of your mouse moving across the screen? * While typing, do you notice that it is really tedious to create those long lines of text, because you have to re-type the same letters over and over again? Or do you want to save that time? * Have you ever wanted to quickly capture a screencast of a long process, such as how you type an email? or a project document? * What if you want to have a live screencast of the keys you type in a foreign language? * What if you want to record your voice playing music? * What if you want to listen to what you just typed? * What if you want to record your voice in a different location, e.g. another room? * What if you want to record your voice, but not play it? * What if you want to record a part of a document you are working on, like "InkNote"? KeyMacro is an alternative to other screencasting solutions. It doesn't need a microphone to work. Simply launch the software, and place a cursor over a small section of the application and press the space bar to capture the screen. If you want to know more, please read the features below: Features * Windows or Mac applications. Windows and Mac versions are available. * Automatically and correctly capture keyboard activity. * Freely assign keyboard shortcuts 81e310abbf

In a discussion, a colleague of mine mentioned that there was a problem with his Windows 7 system. He has several USB thumb drives that he has always used, and they worked great. However, he recently plugged in a thumb drive and tried to move a shortcut for Windows Media Player on one of his thumb drives to the C drive. It was as if the thumb drive was treated as a hard drive. The C drive showed up as a new drive on My Computer and had the music, TV, and other apps that he uses. Also, if the thumb drive was formatted as NTFS or FAT32, it also showed up as a new drive. This is exactly the problem that he was experiencing. So he asked me how he could fix this. In doing some research, I found this answer in this site: Navigate to the folder with all the shortcuts on the root of your drive. Go to the Libraries folder inside your Documents folder. Right click on Libraries and choose Create Shortcut. But then I couldn't get it to work because I didn't have the folders he was talking about. So I ran the Sysinternals tool on my laptop to check where the Windows Media Player shortcuts were stored. It was actually in a strange folder called "system:Windows-Media-Player-Controls-S4A" located in the Users\Default folder. So, my question is: Can anyone explain how the system:Windows-Media-Player-Controls-S4A folder gets created on a thumb drive and is how it is linked to Music, TV etc, and also, why is this folder only created on thumb drives? A: This is an interesting question and I thought I would add my 2 cents. There is an excellent article here which outlines a process for determining what files are stored on a thumb drive. You can use the SetFolderLocation command and the Hidden Files and Folders tab to get a list of all the files and folders on the drive. My experience has been that if you are using a thumb drive
