New Features Integration with Gadu-Gadu Network WideStream is now able to search for online servers and to download the files from them through the Gadu-Gadu network. Just a dialog window will appear to request the user permissions required for accessing the network servers. WideStream stores the information of online servers in a database that will be updated once a day, hence allowing it to search and download more servers. X-Accelerator WideStream now offers an alternative interface, that of X-Accelerator, which speeds up downloads from multiple IP addresses simultaneously, using the HTTP-Proxy and Resume capabilities of the program. Alternative UI A new WIDGET-DATA icon has been added, which will display the program in an alternative layout. The New User Interface dialog (NUI) is now displayed to users when they first install WideStream, this is in addition to the NUI appearing at the end of the setup process. The NUI can be disabled, if needed. Over 20 bugs have been fixed. Among others, the following ones have been fixed: A problem caused by the language of the user interface, which was causing the user interface to appear not in a consistent way. A problem that caused the accelerators to be not properly read from the Windows registry, and the accelerators were not properly stored on a new installation.
