Scrapnaut is a game about accumulating cows. And that's what you're doing when you play Scrapnaut.

"Click at least 5 Cows to Incubate" is the killer feature of the game.

Once you incubate a cow you can click at will to make more.

Winning both gold and silver at once is possible, however you only need to click the gold cud for that to happen.

If you click 5 cows into incubation very fast, you'll get your precious gold/silver rewards.

Even though you only have a limited time each day to play, you still have to click the cows as quickly as possible to get your rewards.

This game will keep you busy for hours.

There are a total of 52 different cows to click. However, only 50 of them are required to get the game going. The 6 remaining are just for the betas. They are not added to the game until the first week of closed beta.

Are you ready to take on the challenge? Can you solve the puzzles at each new level? Are you ready to see how much you can get? Fluidity The game was inspired by the natural phenomenon of water, a fluid that is used in real life, having many properties, but is most importantly, is free, dynamic, she is elastic, while maintaining its volume and as if by magic, although not really, everything disappears, everything dissolves and re-appears. This is the fundamental property of water in contrast to other fluids, for example oil, gas, etc. This is the nature of water. And what about us? As we move, we are governed by fluid dynamics. As we need to breathe, we are in fact breathing water. Is water static, stationary? No. It is, of course, flowing, but not really like a river, but more like a meridional movement of water, a great surging movement, without apparent direction and hardly any forward movement. This property makes the emergence of the game interesting and useful in this respect. There is a great difference between these two states of water, the liquid state and the gas state. The gas state is, of course, boiling water. The liquid state is, of course, water flowing. The difference between these two states is inherent in the nature of water. And which is the difference? The gas state is air bubbles, they are relatively small and free. The liquid state is the great, big, giant water waves, they are relatively free. It is the surface that is different. The surface of the air is the same as the surface of the air. The surface of the water is different. It has a great shape, it has many cavities, it has many different pores. This fluid state is all about the capacity of water to adapt to its environment. It is a phenomenon known as the existence of the liquid-gas transition. But it is a mystery that makes water unique. The one who has immersed himself in the liquid state is a kamikaze, who has experienced the great water wave and the incredible ocean. This is the ocean, has anyone has such an experience? What could be more amazing than this? It is the liquid state. This is the fluid state. Without the transition to the gas state, our lives would be unbearable. How can it be? In the gas state, the air is fixed, all of the time. The liquid state is changing constantly. The liquid

RAW data and then encoding it with the Peach standard in 4x speed for QuickTime and then with the smaller and more compressed H264 standard (with 8x speed) in 10 minutes, I noticed several things in the movie that seemed odd. 1) The face value of the video file, when it is still associated with the software, is just shy of 9 GB (8.9972 GB). 2) I stopped recording the video with screen capturing so I could upload it with software as well. 3) After doing it both ways, I can clearly see that the raw data is literally just straight (no compression) and the output is completely different in term of size and quality with the built in screen capture software as compared to uploading it to RapidShare and then viewing it in Quicktime with screen capture. 4) Then, when I did the 10 minutes of H264 encoding to the VX Ace, the same qualities were true. 5) I can only guess that the software has some in built H264 encoder and most likely the default settings for that are different than the included one. ++++++ don't know which way was better but it is good to know I can cheat this service. I should mention that after not understanding why the service was saying the upload would take 10 minutes, I uploaded the video file the other way (a "normal" video transfer took about a minute). After learning it would only take up to 10 minutes, I uploaded the 40 minute video the other way. To my surprise, both way worked well. Odd. Anyways, the
