Q: Visual Studio: Run the website on iis express with certain port using HttpModule I have a requirement to run our website on iis express with a new port which is running on port 3000. I have a HttpModule used to redirect from http to https. Using this HttpModule, I'm closing the current window. The problem is, the port in the URL is getting lost after that. This is what I have configured in web.config: In HttpModule: `HttpApplication app = (HttpApplication)sender; app.Request.Url.Scheme = "https"; app.Response.RedirectPermanent(app.Request.RawUrl, false);` So now, I need to configure the web.config such that: The URL looks like this: instead of just this: Is it possible to change the port number while doing so, or should I do it some other way? Thanks in advance A: That's not possible with a HttpModule, because HttpModules are not invoked on the server side. You'd either have to use that `UrlRewritingModule` for redirecting from https, but that would cause you problems, or just go with the normal IIS settings, and redirect to the correct port if you want to run your site on a different port. All other options will not require additional port numbers, because the incoming request always has the HTTP version,
