This development guide will help you get started developing using the The Next Generation in .NET Framework 4.0, common language runtime (CLR). This new CLR will provide the ability to build .NET applications that are future proof, enables component reuse, and provides a dynamic runtime. This new framework will solve many of the problems and limitations that exist today. This document will give you the information necessary to get started developing your first .NET 4.0 project, using Visual Studio 2012. The Dakota Access Pipeline protesters have blocked the finish line in North Dakota. The protesters say they will stay until they are arrested or forced to leave. Earlier, the controversial pipeline opened an 18-mile segment. The pipeline is the first US pipeline to cross an international border. This image, showing the protesters on the site of a crossing of the Missouri River with the pipeline, was captured by AP photographers Cody Williams and John A. Rooney in Cannon Ball, North Dakota. About 100 protesters have been arrested at the site of the Dakota Access Pipeline's crossing of the Missouri River in Cannon Ball, North Dakota. What are the details? The protesters, who call themselves water protectors, have been camped on a large tract of land north of Bismarck. They say they will continue to hold their ground despite the arrests. An area named Oceti Sakowin has been the site of a protest against the pipeline for months. The protesters say the pipeline will desecrate sacred land, and will wreck the water supply of tribal members in the area, leading to a risk of mass flooding. The protesters say the danger is significant. According to the Guardian, a Dakota Access Pipeline official told the protesters that they could be subject to arrest, adding that the police don't intend to force the demonstrators to leave the area. The protesters also say they may have to cross the Missouri River to reach a new camp area. Anything else? The Army Corps of Engineers has yet to decide whether it will grant permission for the pipeline to cross the Missouri River. The Corps says it has not completed an
