LIESL: THE ORIGIN STORY A link to a different world. Long ago, a fairy tale called the "Book of Laying", a book of powerful memories, was found. The Book of Laying documented history and a hidden story that was always there—a story of the dead. The people who once inhabited this world called the Living Land have long since passed on. But after reading the book's document, a young girl named

Liesl stumbled upon the book of memories. While looking through the book, the girl, who believed she was named Miranda, noticed that the book contained memories of another world that was different from the world of the Living Land. The young girl immediately decided that she wanted to visit that other world and go on an adventure. And so the girl named Liesl set out on her journey through the Realms of Oblivion, a wandering in search of the truth. continent between the land of the Elden and of the Vanila. Divided by numerous black mountains, these lands are home to a number of unique races. The Lands Between is home to the Elden, who are a race of elves descended from the Elder Elves who once ruled the Elden lands. Over countless centuries, their connection to the Elder Elves ended, and the Elden survived in the lands between as a primitive tribal people. The Lands Between is home to the Vanila, a race of humans that started as a cross-breed of elves and humans, who were abandoned due to the result of the battle between the Elder Elves and the Vanila. As a result, many elves fled to other lands, and the Vanila were left with the split of the tribe and the issue of having no more elves to serve as their allies, as well as a diminished group of players. Neither of the two races is primitive, and both of them have made remarkable strides of progress in their development. While there are still many problems in the lands between, problems between the races are more isolated than those within any of the races. The story of the play within the game revolves around the meeting between two characters from vastly different sides of the conflict, making up the players' party. The game opens with the two characters meeting for the first time, with each of them having set out on their own journey to resolve their own problems, and meeting the new conflict halfway. Events that occur between the two characters affect the relationship between them, and bring to light the possible differences in their interests obtainable through XP anyway. When you put that all together, I find it odd that you're seeing a difference, and I'm going to assume that you're using a very very very low level character. You can actually see it best when you hit level 70 (when you should have enough XP to get total res), and you hit 70, 60, 50, 40, and 30. What you would expect the XP to be at 28 is instead the amounts of XP you've gotten and you're level 28, not 30 (because the base walkspeed changed) and the skill tree we're different because upgrading it is different and requires more base XP. The difference should be 0.0-2.2 for the speed. About double. work linking GEM with BMP4 (Fig. 3h{ref-type="fig"} and Supplementary Fig. 3{ref-type="media"}) and we previously demonstrated that BMP4 positively modulates *Gpr161* expression<sup>[@CR12]</sup>. Although GCs increase TGFβ1 synthesis and release, the functional significance of this is yet unclear. GCs are known to produce several modulators of CNS development and function, such as factors that promote active TGFβ1 inhibition, TGFβ1-dependent differentiation of M2 microglia and NGF-dependent cell survival<sup>[@CR15],[@CR25]--[@CR28]</sup>. Notably, GCs were recently shown to regulate GFAP-positive astrocyte differentiation from neural progenitor cells<sup>[@CR29]</sup>. Interestingly, brain derived neurotrophic factor (BDNF) is implicated in cognitive functions and has been linked to the activity of the hypothalamic arcuate nucleus which, in turn, controls memory and mood<sup>[@CR30],[@CR31]</sup>. GFAP-positive astrocyte expression in the hypothalamic arcuate nucleus is known to be critical for the balance between food intake and energy expenditure,
