The authors describe their experience of femoropopliteal arterial reconstruction in 656 patients. A significant improvement of the patient's fitness was achieved in 95.2% of patients. The operative intervention was carried out by three different types of arterial reconstructive methods. Overall amputations were made in 38 patients (5.6%). Thromboendarterectomy of the lower extremity artery was performed in 205 patients (30.1%), 11 being required to undergo amputation (10.2%) in case of unfavourable results of the operation. Stage II peripheral ischaemia of the lower extremity affected 70% of the patients, whereas the rest was accounted for by stage III. In 44 cases (6.5%) the peripheral blood flow was not restored in the postoperative period, and the patients were reoperated by the authors. The best results were obtained in patients with arterial diseases of peripheral arteries of stage II. Thromboendarterectomy of the lower extremity artery in 20 patients (3.0%) was performed for the aim of improvement of patient's fitness without reoperation. Q: Angular2 d3 force field arc Doing an angular2 force calculation by using d3js Basically creating a field that displays a radial force. var force = d3.forceRadial().strength(-100).alpha(0.35).distance(0.01); Currently the force is only displayed on the Y-axis. I would like to display the field from the X to the Y axis. A: d3.forceRadial By default, d3.forceRadial creates a function that draws a small circle for each node in the simulation. The function takes the node's position and its force applied on that node and returns the coordinates of the center and radius of the circle. The center and radius of the circle are the force applied to the node and the distance of the circle from the center of the simulation. The default angle of the circle is 45 degrees to give a "donut" appearance. force.x(function(d
