Bartender Enterprise Automation 11.1 Crack Is The Best Software Solution To Automate One To All Business. Q: Calculate the product of three integers using only one recursion call. I've been writing a recursive algorithm to calculate the product of three or more integers. I have to be able to calculate at the maximum depth no more than three. The problem I've encountered is that I'm unable to prove that my maximum depth is three, the algorithm is given here: `int Multiply(int *a, int *b, int *c, int depth) { if (depth == 0) return *a * *b * *c; return Multiply(*a, *b, *c, depth - 1); }` I'm also having problems in writing the base case, and checking that it works like expected. After many hours of trying it myself I can't seem to come up with a solution that checks my base case and the maximum depth. A: To determine the base case you just need to check that the function returns 0 when all three of the input parameters are 0. There will be two possible base cases. For your recursion you want to call the function again from the lowest depth until it is undefined - or return 0. So for your example a depth of 0 is impossible. A depth of 1 would result in multiplying two numbers together. A depth of 2 would make sure that all the numbers are multiplied together. 6d1f23a050
